

Alameda Sun

Locally Owned, Community Oriented

Vol. 10 No. 30
April 28, 2011

Courtesy photo

Royalty on Park Street

Dennis Evanosky

Her Rebel Highness' Princesses Victoria, Antonina and Genevieve made a surprise appearance on Park Street last Sunday to spread a little Easter cheer with candy and song.

The princesses, from left to right, Maria Mikheyenko, Brooke Munoz and Velia Amarasingham, met a princess-in-waiting along the way. Amarasingham, who lives in Alameda, came up with the idea three years ago to start Her Rebel Highness. She was looking for new material. Her fictitious princesses depict women suppressed by their royal parents who want them to play the role of princess.

"Yet all the women want to remain strong, independent and not conform to a set rule," said Amarasingham. "I'm very much into English literature and a huge Jane Austen fan, so the inspiration for the language behind the script of the show really comes from that era."

Her Rebel Highness' performances offer an original musical experience that combines music, vocals, choreography and elaborate costumes with creativity and an entertaining message.

The ladies will be appearing at the Park Street Spring Festival on Saturday and Sunday, May 7 and 8.